Community Update

Mayors Message:

Independence Day and Pioneer Day are past. Looking back, these were probably my favorite times of the year, with fireworks, picnics in the park, beard growing contests and games for the kids. It was a festive time. It was a time for remembering and paying tribute to those who gave so much.

I attended the dedication of a memorial at the tabernacle. There were twenty or so in attendance, none of whom were young. No small children or teens. The evening of Pioneer Day I attended a fireside. There was a great speaker, Nathan Williams, who helped remind us of our heritage. It was an inspirational message, one worth hearing. Sadly those in attendance, for the most part, were my age and older. We are the people close enough in years to the events of the past and the pioneers who created our legacy. We truly loved the presentation.

I fear that we are not educating our children. We are not instilling in them a love for the past. We are not creating in them an appreciation for the sacrifice, the dedication and the service rendered by those who have gone before. Without an appreciation for the past and an understanding of what was created by our pioneer forbears, I fear for this coming generation. I fear that without an understanding of the past they will not have a vision for the future.

I implore all citizens to take the time to teach our youth in whatever way we may and instill in them an understanding and love for what has gone on before. We are celebrating one hundred years as Madison County. Let us prepare for the next one hundred years. Let us be active participants in our future. Let us begin by teaching our children the past and invite them to be involved in creating their future.
